In Memoriam

Arthur Gould Tasheira, 1878-1938

Arthur Gould Tasheira carried on the best tradition of professional learning, culture, courtesy, and fair dealing. He represented banks and other large corporate interests, but he gave the same care and fidelity to the many clients whose little businesses, small savings or inheritances meant everything to them. This sympathetic personal attention to the conservation of their interests made his clients his devoted friends, and they were large in number for a retiring man who shunned all publicity.

To fulfill his duty to his profession in legal education he served on the Board of Bar Examiners for several years. From 1909-1920 he was a lecturer in the School of Jurisprudence, giving from time to time courses in negotiable instruments and in insurance. To his teaching he brought a fine combination of theory and practice. He enjoyed the work and it was with regret on his part and much more on the part of the School that the pressure of the duties of his office compelled his resignation.
