DEDICATION

The Board of Editors expresses its appreciation to Edward C. Halbach, Jr. for his service as Dean of the University of California School of Law, at Berkeley (Boalt Hall) during the last nine years and welcomes him back to the classroom as a full-time professor. The difficult tasks of administration now devolve to his fellow scholar and colleague Sanford H. Kadish.

During the last decade Boalt Hall has grown in many directions. An enriching diversity of course offerings, increased opportunities for interdisciplinary study and clinical work have manifested that development. The Earl Warren Legal Institute was established, giving rise to the National Housing and Economic Development Law Project, the Childhood and Government Project and the Center for the Study of Law and Society. Minority student enrollment has increased, and during a period of budgetary stringency the Dean has made substantial efforts to raise funds necessary to provide financial assistance for all who required it.

These past years have presented difficult problems; the changes have been positive and innovative in response. We greet the appointment of Dean Kadish with confidence that his tenure will bring continued improvement.

It is with pride and gratitude that we acknowledge his past contributions, anticipate his future service and dedicate this issue of the California Law Review to Professor Edward C. Halbach, Jr.
