DEDICATION

Richard W. Jennings' career as a law professor spans four decades, during which he has influenced hundreds of Boalt Hall students now practicing in many areas of the law. It therefore seemed especially appropriate to commemorate his retirement with tributes from a few of those former students. The contributors to the tribute section range in time from Professor Jennings' first year as a regular faculty member at Boalt Hall to this, his last, and in practice from a securities partner in a San Francisco law firm and a federal judge to a Japanese law professor and a congressional legislative counsel. Professor Jennings has been a great friend and mentor to the California Law Review over these many years; thus it is with deepest appreciation that we dedicate this issue to him on the occasion of his retirement.
